WHEN GEORGE WASHINGTON WAS ELECTED PRESIDENT OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

May 25, is the date often neglected in recounting the important events of our history, but is one of great significance. On May 25, 1787, we are informed by the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, George Washington was elected President of the Constitutional Convention. This Convention had been called for the purpose of amending the Articles of Confederation under which the country had been governed since 1781, and which had proved ineffectual. Instead, however, the delegates assembled at Philadelphia threw the Articles over-board and adopted a new Constitution which has since been our instrument of Government.

On the very first day of the Convention, George Washington was "called up to the chair as President of the body." The man who had led the Continental Army to victory, earning the title of "First in War," was now given this signal honor and was soon to add to that title, "First in Peace." The fact that the foremost men of the country were gathered on this occasion and the fact that this Convention was probably the most important assembly ever held on this Continent, further attests to the esteem in which George Washington was held by his fellow countrymen.

We know from source records that Washington made only one suggestion to the Convention in session. We also know, however, from the records of his contemporaries, that he was one of the most influential delegates to the Convention. His was not the role of an impassioned orator, but a mediator—a conciliator who, by his glorious character, by his clear thinking, and by his patriotism, was able to bring the discontented human elements together to make possible our Constitution.

As every student of American history knows, the Constitutional Convention was beset with difficulties. Sectional rivalries cropped up; different theories of government were ardently sponsored; debates became heated, and personalities clashed. But George Washington was always there to help iron out these difficulties. Who can tell? Without the aid of George Washington, the Constitution as we know it might never have been evolved.

THREE MILLION AT A BLOW

"With mothers' day just behind us and fathers' day just ahead, this is the time to give attention to those other parents, who themselves and whose offspring may threaten our lives and the lives of those near and dear to us," says the Iowa State Department of Health.

Mr. and Mrs. Musca Domestica, alias Typhoid Fly, are now about to appear in our communities and settle down to a life of crime. Contrary to the custom of most housewives, Mrs. Musca deliberately seeks a place of filth in which to rear her children. The garbage pile and manure heap are favorite places. If all eggs hatched, the progeny of one pair of flies would amount to 3,000,000 flies in one season, for more than 100 eggs are laid at a time and eggs are laid every ten days.

"The housefly has been found to be responsible for the transmission of fourteen diseases, chief of which are typhoid fever, dysentery and diphtheria.

"He is a wise man who covers his garbage pail and who removes the manure pile, thus preventing the fly from breeding, and who screens his house, thus preventing access of the straw fly to his food.

"Swat the early fly and kill THREE MILLION AT A BLOW."
