Billy had Jawson in Charley Hancock, catcher and out distress several times, but his greatest fielder with the Ghosts. opportunity came in the second round when he staggered Joe with a vicious righthand punch over the heart. It came close to the end of the stanza and Joe was smart enough to weather the gale until the hell sounded. Good Fight All the Way.

There was no letup in the terriffe fighting from the first round to the The boys, perfectly trained, stood in there and punched constantly, giving the fans a big thrill on severa occasions when they elected to stand in the center and trade punches. Petrolle used a left hand to do most of damage, first jabbing with it, then hooking it. Jawson's best weapon was a hard left hook and he found leaves the second trolle with it second the found leaves to the second trolle with it second the found leaves the second trolle with it second the found leaves the second trolle with it second the second trolle with its second trolle with the second Petrolle with it several times, The Pargo boy, however, was too canny to he caught napping often and a right hand that he held next to his check took the sting off most of the punches Jawson started in his direc-

It appeared that they might tire early, judging from their terrifle starting pace, but as one stanza suc-ceeded another they both kept up their constant stream of punches and the rans gave them cheer after cheer. Near the end of the fifth round Petrolle opened a cut over Jawson's left eye and from then on he continued to make the optic a target for his left jabs. The ninth round was Jawson's best. He did most of the Jawson's best. He did most of the leading during this stanza and carned a shade. Outside of that single round.

It is a much better boy that he was a year ago when he boxed a semi-windup here. He hits harder, looks better defensively and lacks none of the essentials of a finished ringman.

Jawson's credit it must be said that he gave Billy a great fight. The that he gave Billy a great fight. The skeptics who didn't think he would were more than satisfied about his ability when it was over, Jawson came to Sloux City bearing the reputation of being a tough opponent for any lightweight. French Wins on Foul.

An accidental low punch in the first gave Rollie French a victory over Fuffy Griffliths in what was to have been an 8-round fight. French was Fournier's Fifth Home coming in as the blow started and he seemed to lift his body in an effort to avoid it. Instead he placed his groin right in the way of the blow and it struck him squarely.
