

Donaldson likewise pitched his most noteworthy game Sunday. He received faultless support but his teammates for the most part might as well have sat on the bench and played mumble-di-peg for he needed very little assistance. He made an average of two strikeouts to the inning and in the first sixth and ninth innings retired Sioux Falls in successive strikeouts. In the eighth and ninth innings he made five strikeouts in succession. The black boy's sacrifice hit in the thirteenth gave Blattner the advance he needed to make his winning run possible. He assisted in the put out of two batters, fielded errorlessly and made one of the stolen bases of the made one of the only two stolen bases of the entire game. Like Lane he pitched one inning too many. In the last inning he weakened. His delivery lacked its usual snap and the score card indicates that he needed relief for Steckman and Lappin each hit him, one for a safe hit and he walked Dakin.
