

Imported Southpaw Revives Courage of Chocolate Men

The Los Angeles White Sox, colored, are still whimpering. They want Manager Hull to bring back his San Diego ball club and clean them again.

Lon Goodwin, boss of the colored aggregation, wired for Hull to come north again next Sunday, but the local leader is not crazy about it and the chances are that the proffer will be refused.

The elevation of spirit in the White Sox camp is due to an acquisition of a southpaw pitcher, whom they refer to as the greatest left-hander in the game. His name is Donaldton and his home is Kansas City. Donaldton says that John McGraw looked him over and said he was the best southpaw he ever saw and could have shown Rube Waddell something in the Keuben's palmest day.

The Evening Tribune, San Diego, California

Tuesday, February 13, 1917, Page 6, Column 2